SECTION A
READING SKILLS (22 marks)

1. Read the following passage carefully: 12

- 1 What does travel do to you? Do you come back home a different person? Travel could be far more than a change of scenery — it can become a spiritual experience that shakes off our usual certainties and connects us to a richer, vaster world.
- 2 As celebrated travel writer Pico Iyer reflects, “When you are in a foreign place, you can’t define yourself as you used to.” In unfamiliar surroundings, stripped of familiar routines and expectations, we are no longer the versions of ourselves that we know best. The landmarks that once anchored our identity fall away, and in their absence, a wider self begins to emerge.
- 3 This transformation is not just poetic — it’s practical. When we travel, we encounter different cultures, traditions, landscapes and belief systems. These interactions gently push us to question our assumptions and recalibrate our worldview. Such places possess a beauty and depth that move almost everyone who visits, regardless of their background or belief.
- 4 Indeed, many travellers discover that their journey becomes a mirror. The unfamiliar acts as a magnifying glass on the self: our prejudices, fears, joys and curiosities all come into sharper focus. Iyer suggests that in such moments, we return “a different person than the one who left home.” We become more curious, humble and open to the world’s complexity, rather than reinforcing old certainties.

- 5 Travel's greatest gift may be humility. When we step out of our comfort zones, we face situations that challenge our assumptions — from language barriers to unfamiliar foods, social norms and customs. This daily negotiation with difference teaches us resilience and empathy. As travellers engage with peoples whose lives have unfolded on very different cultural trajectories, they begin to weave a broader understanding of humanity.
- 6 But not all travel has to be far-flung to be transformative. Even within one's own country, journeys through varied landscapes — deserts, mountains, coastlines, forests — can stir a deeper appreciation for life's diversity and the interconnectedness of all people. In a world where so many people live in digital proximity yet real-world distance, travel reminds us that human experience is far broader than our immediate neighbourhood.
- 7 Ultimately, travel is not merely about ticking destinations off a list; it's about letting experiences shape a more expansive sense of self. Whether you walk ancient streets, witness natural wonders, share a meal with strangers, or simply watch a sunset in a place unknown, the journey invites reflection, challenges complacency, and inspires growth.

EACH ONE TEACH ONE
When Learning is Shared, it Multiplies

Learning Is Not a Competition. It Is a Responsibility.

In every classroom, there are students who quietly struggle. Some hesitate to ask questions. Some need a little more time. Some simply need someone who will sit beside them and say, “Let’s try again.”

The ‘Each One Teach One’ project begins with a simple but powerful belief — that learning grows when it is shared. Instead of competing with one another, students become partners in progress. Each volunteer chooses one learner who needs support and commits to teaching them for a few weeks. The focus may be reading, writing, mathematics, grammar, or even exam preparation.

When students teach, something remarkable happens. They revise concepts more deeply, understand ideas more clearly, and discover

Two Learners. One Journey.

The impact of this initiative is twofold. The learner gains confidence, clarity, and the courage to ask questions. The student-teacher develops patience, leadership, and empathy. In helping someone else understand, they begin to understand themselves better.

More importantly, the culture of the school begins to change. Classrooms become spaces of cooperation rather than comparison. Success is no longer measured only by marks, but by the ability to uplift others.

‘Each One Teach One’ reminds us that education is not merely about scoring well in examinations. It is about building a community where gaps in their own knowledge. Teaching does not reduce what they know; it strengthens it. Education becomes not just a personal achievement, but a shared journey.	knowledge flows freely and no student feels left behind. One student. One learner. One meaningful difference.
